Glossary

Confused by acronyms or jargon? See a glossary here.

A Taytay inflation bump? Housing subdued.

February's Selected Price Indexes (SPI), despite some overs and unders, were overall in line with our expectation, with the balance of risks around our Q1 CPI forecast of 0.6% q/q (4.0% y/y) unchanged. Two of the big surprises were much stronger domestic airfares, and overseas accommodation costs, the latter likely reflecting Taylor Swift's concerts across the ditch.

The SPI are volatile month-to-month, and extracting signal from noise in these data has proven challenging. That said, it does strengthen our expectation that Q1 CPI inflation will surprise the RBNZ to the upside. But given the RBNZ's more sanguine assessment of medium-term inflation risks at the February MPS, we expect they will look through any small upward starting point surprises, provided the broader disinflation story remains intact. And that is our expectation, with core inflation measures likely to take another meaningful step down in Q1. However, we remain of the view that inflation will take longer than the RBNZ anticipates to moderate.

In other news this week, February's REINZ housing data was directionless, with house prices eking out a 0.2% m/m gain after January's 0.9% lift. Sales volumes rose 6.9% m/m (sa) from January's very weak print, but the level of turnover remains low, and days to sell rose by two days to 46. Weak auction clearance rates and rising inventories add to the subdued picture. We don't see any implications for our housing market outlook from these data, and nor, we expect, will the RBNZ. We continue to expect the housing market will remain sluggish across the first half of the year but there are certainly a lot of moving parts, including tax and other policy changes, restrictive (but falling) mortgage rates, a weakening labour market and rampant population growth. On the latter, net migration inflows dropped to 2,870 in January, as a surge in departures outweighed still very strong arrivals. However, December inflows were revised up over 3k.

Short-term visitor arrivals (largely tourists) remain steady at about 80% of their pre-COVID level, with a muted recovery in visitors from China weighing. All up, while net migration and tourism are supporting economic activity, that is being offset by weak domestic demand, which next week's GDP data expected is expected to confirm, particularly in per capita terms.

Q4 GDP preview

Next week brings the Q4 Balance of Payments and GDP data. We've pencilled in a 0.1% q/q lift in headline GDP, with the services sector expected to just keep growth positive. Broadly, the economy is slowing on the back of past monetary tightening, but there's a lot more going on out there than just the impact of higher interest rates, and it's not one-way traffic. Fiscal settings remain stimulatory, following the 1.4% of GDP injection at Budget 2023, population growth is surging and the housing market, while certainly lacking any momentum, is no longer a drag on growth. While interest rate sensitive sectors such as retail, manufacturing and construction have taken the brunt of monetary tightening, lingering services momentum has presented a challenge to the RBNZ in the form of sticky domestic inflation risks. Accordingly, evidence of a slowdown in the services sector will be a key focus for the RBNZ, and we expect to see the start of that in the Q4 GDP data.

With near-zero growth, the economy is clearly under pressure, especially in the context of strong population growth, with per-capita GDP expected to contract for a fifth consecutive quarter to be down 3.7% from Q3 2022. For the RBNZ, weak economic activity is part of its plan to generate spare capacity across the economy and reduce inflation. The RBNZ has been quite sensitive to GDP developments in its assessment of capacity pressures in the economy, but lingering volatility in the data after emerging from the COVID period, along with last year's cyclone-related disruption, still make it challenging to extract signal from noise, warranting caution in interpreting these data. It's worth noting that taming inflation isn't just about restraining demand. A stronger supply-side recovery could mean activity lands on the more robust side of expectations while inflation nonetheless continues to slow. The challenge for the RBNZ is that the impact of weakening demand on inflation isn't occurring in real time; there are long and variable lags to contend with. And while growth is certainly very weak, domestic inflation pressures continue to ease more gradually than the RBNZ anticipated when they called a stop to hikes.

Turning to the Balance of Payments, we expect the annual current account deficit to narrow from 7.6% of GDP in Q3 to 7.1%. Weaker import demand is narrowing the goods deficit, while the ongoing tourism recovery, while incomplete, is narrowing the services deficit. Meanwhile, the income deficit, which is always the harder part to forecast given limited indicators, is expected to widen 0.1%pts to 3.1% of GDP as foreign-held NZ investments outperform NZ-held foreign investments. Looking forward, we see the annual current account deficit continuing to narrow from here, but it will be some time before it returns to sustainable levels.

Interest rate markets

Global and local interest rates have drifted higher this week, fuelled by stronger-than-expected US inflation data, which has seen markets pare its expectations for how soon and how quickly the Fed might cut. While local Selected Price Index data for February came in broadly as we expected, as we noted in our Review, it does suggest the RBNZ's Q1 CPI forecast of just 0.4% might be a bit light, and that point hasn't been lost on the local market. Looking ahead, we expect interest rates to continue to ebb and flow with the data, but with asymmetric risks reflecting limited capacity on the part of both the Fed and RBNZ to tolerate upside inflation surprises. And with markets priced for things going right rather than wrong on that front, we're wary of the possibility of spikes higher in interest rates here and in the US. Next week is a big one on the data front, with the Fed decision (7am NZT) and NZ Q4 GDP (10:45am) due Thursday. We have tweaked our interest rate forecasts slightly, with the main change being a more gradual decline in 90 day and 2yr swap rates.

FX markets

The NZD continues to ebb and flow with interest rates differentials, with the USD doing most of the work as market recalibrate expectations for Fed policy. Should we see any rise in the Fed's 2024 dot plot, the USD is likely to benefit.

Key data summary

ANZ Truckometer – February. The Light Traffic Index rose 1.9% m/m in February, while the Heavy Traffic Index rose 2.4% in the month.

Electronic Card Transactions – February. Retail spending fell 1.8% m/m, offsetting the 2% m/m bounce in December.

Selected Price Indexes – February. Mixed details offset, meaning no implications for our Q1 CPI forecast of 0.6% q/q. See our Review.

REINZ House Prices – February. House prices eked out a 0.2% m/m gain and don't look to be going anywhere fast. See our Review.

Net Migration – January. A surge in departures offset still-high arrivals to see the net inflow fall to 2,780 in January. However, a ~3k upward revision to December offset some of that weakness.

Manufacturing PMI – February. Rose 1.8pts to 49.3. though still in contractionary territory.

The week ahead

Performance Services Index – February (Monday 18 March, 10:30am). Month-to-month volatility aside, it has been trending sideways around the 50 mark. A pullback after last month's bounce wouldn't surprise.

GlobalDairyTrade auction (Wednesday 20 March, early am). Dairy futures indicate a further 2.5% fall in the GDT Price Index at the next auction, but global milk supplies are waning and prices are expected to improve again in the coming months.

Current Account Balance – Q4 (Wednesday 20 March, 10.45am). The annual current account deficit is expected to narrow 0.5%pts to 7.1% of GDP. See our Preview.

GDP – Q4 (Thursday 21 March, 10.45am). We've pencilled in a 0.1% q/q expansion for Q4 GDP, with per capita growth in for yet another quarterly contraction. See our Preview.

Overseas Merchandise Trade – February (Friday 22 March, 10:45am). A seasonal lift in export returns ($5.5bn) will help narrow the trade deficit to $500m, as imports are expected to ease to $6bn.
